Presentation

Hey, I'm Adrien, a former web developer originally from a French Island near Madagascar, now calling Berlin home since a while. Although I spent years in the tech world, my artistic journey began just over a year ago when I stumbled upon generative art. The appeal of using code to uncover emerging patterns became a playful exploration. My medium of choice is to use a pen plotter, a robotic contraption that brings my coded creations to life on paper. In this colourful journey, I play with shapes and hues, creating captivating variations. My art explores the fusion of technology and creativity, embracing playful and vibrant aesthetics. It challenges traditional notions of authorship—prompting questions about the artist (me or the robot) and the essence of art (the code or the finished product).

For the Gallery Sunday event, I invite you to engage directly with my algorithms and witness live projections of the results. Accompanied by my reliable robot printer, we'll be conducting live printing sessions, creating postcards and artworks in real-time.
